1 Academic discipline Social and Cultural Anthropology

The Master's programme in Social and Cultural Anthropology, as part of a one-subject Master's programme provides in-depth research-oriented training in a cultural and social science that deals with human culture in general and individual cultures in particular on an empirical basis. The traditional focus of the discipline of Social and Cultural Anthropology is on rural non-European cultures and societies. These are still the focus of attention today, but in recent decades urban and industrial societies have increasingly come into view, and one's own society has also become an important topic.

1.1 Contents, objectives and requirements

The Master's programme in Social and Cultural Anthropology builds on basic anthropological knowledge and offers specialised, research-oriented training in three areas in Cologne: 1. "Socioeconomics and environmental anthropology", 2. "Media anthropology" and 3. "Anthropology of globalisation and translocal mobilities". The training is thus dedicated to advanced comparative cultural research, which is oriented towards the research projects of the staff. In many cases, the focus is on topics with great practical and political significance. In addition, cultural theories and research strategies are taught at an advanced level.

In the one-subject Master's in Social and Cultural Anthropology, students specialise in two of the above-mentioned areas and thus acquire broad and in-depth anthropological knowledge that qualifies them in particular for an academic career in Social and Cultural Anthropology. These qualifications are in demand in science-related professional fields with an intercultural or transcultural orientation (e.g. development cooperation, work in international organisations). In addition, the empirical study components are especially promoted in the one-subject Master's in Social and Cultural Anthropology and specifically emphasised in the research-related teaching: In the regularly-occurring, guided field research trainings and internships, there is the opportunity for practical application of differentiated methodology. In addition, individual methods of anthropological field research are trained in depth and the exchange with foreign partner universities is encouraged. Students thus learn about the possibilities and limitations of anthropological methods by putting together their own research project from the first semester onwards. Finally, students of the one-subject Master's are given the opportunity to carry out scientific exchange in praxis by completing study achievements at specialised workshops already during their studies. Regionally, the research areas are Africa and Asia, but special emphasis is placed on a comprehensive programme that is applicable to all subject areas and regions as well as the student's own society.

Programme objectives

The programme teaches in-depth analytical judgement and a critically-reflective approach to scientific theories, methods and findings at the cutting edge of knowledge. Integrating knowledge, taking ethical principles into account, dealing with complexity, developing ideas independently and concretizing them in scientific exchange - these skills are particularly well trained in the degree programme. At the end of the programme, research and applied r projects can be developed and carried out independently, and anthropological positions can be exchanged and defended in multidisciplinary scientific discourse at a high level. Furthermore, not least through the practical experience of field research, students possess a high degree of intercultural competence, i.e. skills that are comprehensively applicable in social and cultural science research and knowledge transfer as well as in science-related professional areas.

Admission requirements

Admission to the Master's programme in Social and Cultural Anthropology is open to graduates with a Bachelor's degree (or a comparable degree) in the subjects of Anthropology, Social Anthropology or Cultural Anthropology, provided that Social Anthropology and Cultural Anthropology are subjects that are anchored in anthropological) subject traditions. After case-by-case review, Bachelor's graduates (as well as graduates with a comparable degree) from affine subjects can also be admitted, provided they have at least 40 CP in relevant subject studies. Affine subjects include, for example, European ethnology as well as cultural studies, which have roots in the tradition of folkloristic and/or literary studies; social science subjects, such as (developmental) sociology, and last but not least, study programmes oriented towards regional and area studies, such as Asian and African studies or Islamic studies. Relevant subject knowledge includes solid basic knowledge of modern social science theories and methods as well as factual and regional knowledge of modern anthropology.

As a further admission requirement for the Master's programme, knowledge of English at level B2 according to the Common European Framework of Reference (CEFR) is required.

Study requirements

Knowledge of another modern foreign language other than English must be acquired during the degree programme if not already possessed at the beginning of the programme. If this further foreign language is a European foreign language, knowledge at the level of A2 CEFR is required. This applies analogously for non-European languages. The language requirements must be proven at the latest when registering for the Master's thesis, i.e. knowledge of a further foreign language is anchored as a module requirement in the Master's thesis module (see below under 2.5).

1.2 Programme structure

If the subject Social and Cultural Anthropology is studied within the framework of the one-subject Master's programme, then three advanced modules (AM) and two specialization modules (SM) must be completed as well as at least two supplementary modules (EM). It is compulsory to study one of the supplementary modules EM1 to EM3 and in addition, it is compulsory to complete 12 CP in the other supplementary modules EM4 to EM8.

The workload for the subject Social and Cultural Anthropology is credited in credit points (CP). A workload of 30 hours correspond to 1 CP.

1.5 Calculation of the overall grade

The overall grade is taken from the arithmetic mean of the following examination grades weighted by percentages:

1. Grade of the seminar concluded with an oral exam in advanced module 1 (20%);
2. Grade of the seminar in advanced module 2 concluded with a practical examination (report in the form of written documentation of the application of methods) (20%);
3. Grade of the seminar in advanced module 3 completed with a presentation and written elaboration of a term paper (20%);
4. Grade of the seminar in the first chosen specialization module, completed with a presentation and a written elaboration of a term paper (20%).
5. Grade of the seminar in the second chosen specialization module completed with a presentation and a written elaboration of a term paper (20%).

2. Module Descriptions and Curriculum

Note: According to Section 15 Para. 2 of the examination regulations, the following formats are generally prescribed envisaged as "study achievements" (in German: Studienleistungen): Electronic learning assessments, essays, exercises, homework, short presentations, reports, reviews, test examinations, thesis papers and similar assignments.

The names of the Module Coordinator can be found updated on the homepage of the Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology.

2.1 Advanced modules

All three advanced modules are compulsory modules.

	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> - they can distinguish between different theoretical and methodological positions, critically assess them and synthesise them for the development of new research questions; - they are capable of independently accessing new debates and translating their knowledge into current multidisciplinary debates; - they are able to use the knowledge they have acquired in the development of independent research ideas.
3	Module Content The advanced module 1 "Anthropology of the Contemporary" aims for an analysis of the contemporary by introducing students to current topics and debates in contemporary social and cultural anthropology as they are represented and anthropologically elaborated at the Cologne Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology. Students develop an understanding of the specific anthropological contribution to the understanding of contemporary phenomena and dynamics while developing a focus for their own interests. This will help them prepare for the development of their own research project in the further course of their studies. Recent theoretical trends and current perspectives on social and cultural phenomena and dynamics are reflected in their multidisciplinary relevance and interconnectedness. The focus is on the methodological and theoretical characteristics of empirical research and the modalities of ethnographic knowledge production, with an emphasis on reading recent ethnographic texts. The connection of theories and methods of social and cultural anthropological research is approached in the combination of both seminars and by means of concrete case studies and projects.

3	Module Content This module provides in-depth anthropological knowledge about forms of the social and the constitution of social orders, about the nature of moral norms, value orientations and ethical action, as well as with regard to the dimension of the sacred and the significance of rituals and religious practices. Anthropological knowledge, approaches and debates on these topics are identified and analysed with the students on a cross-cultural and comparative basis using selected anthropological case studies. The advanced-level anthropological knowledge taught in the module underpins Cologne's focus on teaching and research in globalisation, environmental, social and media anthropology. The comparative cultural perspective, which distinguishes anthropology from other social and cultural sciences, is in the foreground. At the same time, account is taken of the fact that current processes of global networking through media, migration flows and economic interdependencies pose new challenges for cultural comparison. Comparison as an analytical method should facilitate a better understanding of the individual ethnographic case and contribute to general theory formation. The close thematic connection of the courses to current research projects at the department guarantees the impartation of the latest methodological and theoretical research. They address phenomena and transcultural processes that shape contemporary societies in different regions of the world. Often – as is the case, for example, when it comes to questions of social justice, religious conflicts, resource conservation, transcultural processes and the mediation of the foreign in the media – they have direct practical dimensions and thus a connection to professional application.

	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> - students are able to critically reflect on the connection between media, technology and culture and to prepare this as a question of cultural techniques for different knowledge formations and areas of practice; - they are able to identify the specifically media-anthropological contribution to qualitative media research and museum work with the help of the concept of cultural technologies and to define and clearly state the specifics of these areas; - acquire a detailed and broad understanding of theories, questions and current research developments in media anthropology, including digital anthropology and contemporary museum studies; - they are able to distinguish between different positions within media anthropology and anthropology of technology as well as museum anthropology, to trace the systematic references of these three fields from the history of the discipline and to critically assess them; - they have theoretical and/or practical knowledge of research with and about audio-visual media, including the preparation, implementation and completion of their own media productions and the critical reflection and practice of media practices in running museums, collections and exhibitions; - they are able to critically reflect on media practices in their socio-cultural manifestations and institutionalised forms; - they are able to consider different epistemic practices in the field of museum research, media practice and artistic engagement as a field of media-anthropological knowledge production; - they are able to independently acquire and apply new knowledge on this focus; - they are able to discuss independent ideas, problems and solutions, on a scientific level, with representatives of different disciplines and with laypersons on the current state of research. They can reflect on the latest media dynamics as a field of public anthropology.
3	Module Content This module conveys the specific methodological and theoretical contribution of media anthropology for qualitative media and cultural research. The connection between media, technology and culture is (i) discussed on the basis of selected anthropological case studies as a question of cultural techniques, (ii) elaborated in the situated and localised research of analogue and digital media practices, and (iii) analysed in institutionalised form using the example of historical and contemporary collection and exhibition practices and related to current postcolonial debates. Methodologically, this module reflects and historicizes the media technologies of anthropological knowledge acquisition as a challenge and design task. It theoretically analyses media practices from classical body technologies and artistic forms of expression to the latest digital media developments and the emerging digital anthropology. It teaches media anthropology practically as part of a public anthropology, in which the globalisation history of media is processed using the example of material culture and local arts in museums and ethnographic collections. New epistemic practices are exercised practically in the form of exhibition interventions and ethnographic film. Knowledge in various professional fields of practice is imparted by way of the course's close thematic connection to current curatorial debates and practices in museums and collections, as well as to socio-political discussions on dealing with present-day cultural diversity. In cross-module, practice-oriented seminars, students can gain practical media skills – using different analogue and digital media – to practice media anthropological field research, and the media processing of anthropological knowledge

2.3 Supplementary Modules

At least two supplementary modules must be completed. It is compulsory to study one of the supplementary modules 1 to 3. It is compulsory to complete 12 CP in the other supplementary modules 4 to 8.

Module Name Field Research Practice
Type of Module Supplementary Module			Modul Code EM1
Identification Number 4506AMFEM1	Workload 360 hours	Credit Points 12 CP	Term 2.-3 Sem.	Offered Every SoSe and WiSe	Duration 2 Semester
1	Course Types		Contact Time	Private Study	Planned Group Size
	a) Practical exercise: Preparation of field research		30 h	30 h	15 students
	b) Field research training (lecture-free period) with practical exercise for follow-up work		30 h	150 h	15 students
	c) Module examination: practical examination			120 h
2	Module Objectives and Skills to be Acquired The supplementary module 1 "Field Research Practice" focuses on the preparation and implementation of the student's own field research project. After successful participation in this module <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - the students have in-depth knowledge regarding the conception and implementation of their own research project; - they have independently developed their own project idea for the Master's thesis in the form of a research design and are able to present it; - they are able to assume responsibility in a team; - they have in-depth skills to reflect on ethical problems of ethnographic work and to implement corresponding findings in the scientific process; - they have consolidated their skills in finding independent solutions to problems in new and unfamiliar situations; - they have in-depth and extended knowledge of project management.
3	Module Content In this module, anthropological field research is practised over two semesters, from the first planning steps to the final evaluation of the data and the written recording of the results. This includes: <ul style="list-style-type: none"> - Presentation of the research idea, which is already developed from Semester 1 in advanced module 2;

MODULE GUIDE - SOCIAL AND CULTURAL ANTHROPOLOGY - ONE-SUBJECT MASTER OF ARTS

	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> - Acquisition of contextual knowledge about the region and topic of the project; - translating the research questions into the appropriate methodological procedures for data collection, supported from Semester 1 by the courses in AM 2; - ethnographic field research over a period of at least 6 weeks (preferably in the lecture-free period). This phase is usually accompanied by intensive mentoring so that problems of empirical data collection as well as interpersonal dynamics of participant observation can be discussed concretely for the individual case; - subsequent reflection on the field research process as well as evaluation and analysis of the data; - Thematisation of technologies of (re)presentation and writing of ethnographic knowledge, following on from the text forms learned in advanced module 2; The Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology usually offers a supervised field research internship abroad every two years, whereby the region in which the internship takes place follows the regional research focus of the department's staff. Participants in the internship abroad programme usually receive financial support from the excursion funds of the Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology. Furthermore, interdisciplinary research internships can also be attended in this module, such as the teaching research programme "Ethnography on your Doorstep" and the research class "World Heritage". Field research can also be carried out following a Spring, Summer or Winter School offered by the Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology in consultation with the supervisor. Furthermore, it is possible to carry out field research in connection with one of the ongoing research projects of the Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology under the supervision of the project leader Finally, field research can also be carried out in a self-organised manner, whereby the affiliation with a partner university or an institution associated with the professional field of anthropology (e.g. from the field of development cooperation) is obligatory.
4	Teaching Methods Practical exercise, research training or internship
5	Prerequisites (for the Module) Parallel attendance of advanced module 2
6	Type of Examination Practical examination: Presentation and reflection on the planning, implementation and results of the data collection and data analysis carried out, documented in the form of an evaluation report of 10-15 pages, i.e. between 3,000 - 4,500 words.
7	Credits Awarded Completion of coursework and participation in the practical exercises and field research internship as well as passing the module examination.
8	Compatibility with other Curricula Compulsory elective module in the two-subject Master's in social and Cultural Anthropology (study profile 2), compulsory elective module in the one-subject Master's.

	d) Module examination Written examination			90
2	Module Objectives and Skills to be Acquired
	Students have acquired basic knowledge of central problems of Islamic history and religion, law, society and culture at different times and in changing geographical contexts. In doing so, they have become familiar with intra-Islamic continuities and diversities.
3	Module Content
	Taking into account the current state of research as well as various new approaches and theories, an overview of religion, history and culture of the Islamic world in the past and present is conveyed, through which students acquire the necessary basic subject knowledge.
	1) The lecture "Religion and Law" provides an overview of normative Muslim religious source texts, their interpretations, rites of Muslim communities as well as the history of the origin and development of Islamic law. Examples are used to illuminate the plurality and dynamics of Muslim religious practices and views in different cultural and local contexts.
	2) The lecture "History and Culture of the Islamic World" deals with the history of the Prophet Muhammad up to the early modern period from Spain to Central Asia and India, socio-economic, intellectual-historical and cultural developments and research questions as well as Shiite denominations.
	3) The lecture ""Cultures and Societies of the Modern Islamic World" deals with the diversity of cultures in the contemporary Islamic world as well as social developments and structures in 'modernity' ("modernisation of Islam"; "Islamisation of modernity"; "secularisation"; "plural modernities").

	Or g) Language course Indonesian I h) Language course Indonesian II	90 90	90 90
2	Module Objectives and Skills to be Acquired In this module, students acquire initial knowledge of the foreign language (Arabic, Farsi, Indonesian or Turkish). After learning the written language, the students have acquired the basics of morphology and phonology as well as syntax and vocabulary. The students can express themselves orally in simple, everyday situations.
3	Content Students choose their language B from Arabic, Farsi, Indonesian or Turkish. This must not be identical to language A. In this module, the basic grammar and a manageable, practically-oriented vocabulary of the respective language are taught. The students deal with phonetics, morphology, syntax and grammar. In addition, first experiences are made in the active use of the language.
4	Teaching Methods Language course
5	Prerequisites (for the Module) None
6	Type of Examination None
7	Credits Awarded none.
8	Compatibility with other Curricula Compulsory module in the single Bachelor's and one-subject Master's Languages and Cultures of the Islamic World, compulsory elective in the one-subject Master's Social and Cultural Anthropology
9	Proportion of Final Grade/final grade
10	Module Coordinator Language Instructor 1
11	Further Information In order to promote active language use at an early stage, it makes sense to create good learning conditions beyond the language courses (e.g. with a tandem partner). This supplementary module is offered by an affiliated department and therefore predominantly in German

2	Module Objectives and Skills to be Acquired The aim of the module is the successful completion of the Master's thesis. It serves to prove that the candidate is able to scientifically work and reflect on a thematically limited problem from the subject area of the degree programme using the required methods within a specified period of time. It can be completed in any field of study. The students acquire the competence for the independent conception and implementation of a clearly outlined, manageable research project in the context of intensive advising and supervision. They expand their methodological competences and consolidate their subject-specific skills for the presentation of complex research content in line with requirements.
3	Module Content The master's thesis is the final module of the master's programme. The module covers the development and implementation of the Master's thesis in all steps. This includes, among other things, the identification of the topic as compared with current research, the outline of the project with clear reflection on the methodology used, as well as the systematic and structured implementation within the given scope of time.

3.2 Subject-specific advice and examination advice

Participation in a study counselling session at the beginning of the first semester (for the organisation of the Master's programme) is recommended.

Further information can be found on the homepage of the Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology: <http://ethnologie.phil-fak.uni-koeln.de>.

The use of further individual study counselling is also strongly recommended. The office hours of the teaching staff can be found on the homepage of the Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology.

3.3 More information and advice

Advice on study abroad: The Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology maintains ERASMUS partnerships with various European universities and is linked to various universities in Africa and Asia through partnership agreements. In addition, the professors of Social and Cultural Anthropology have links to numerous other international universities through research relationships. Through these partnerships and networks, stays abroad can be arranged for students of Social and Cultural Anthropology in Cologne. Further information can be found on the Department's homepage.

KLIPS counselling: The university communication system KLIPS allows students to register online for courses at the Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology, to plan their course of study flexibly, and to register study achievements on their own. The Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology offers subject-specific KLIPS consultation hours for this purpose, see <http://ethnologie.phil-fak.uni-koeln.de>.

Internship advice: Internships provide direct practical experience in potential professional fields. Counselling takes place within the framework of supplementary module 3 "Vocational Practice".
